

I feel that:

1. the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.
2. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved my time at home by limiting the amount to almost no telemarket phone calls
3. Indiana's law has been so effective... (e.g., "I used to receive 12 calls per week, now I only receive one").
4. I just feel that it limits the amount of nonsense phone calls and leaves the phone lines open to the important ones. I personally don't like to answer the phone and have a telemarketer on the other end. I just hang up anyways. And it always seems they call at dinner time when it is a time where most families sit down for the first time that day together. Please leave Indiana's Telephone Law alone.
